World War I on maps. A selection from the collection

2017/09/29 - 2018/03/31

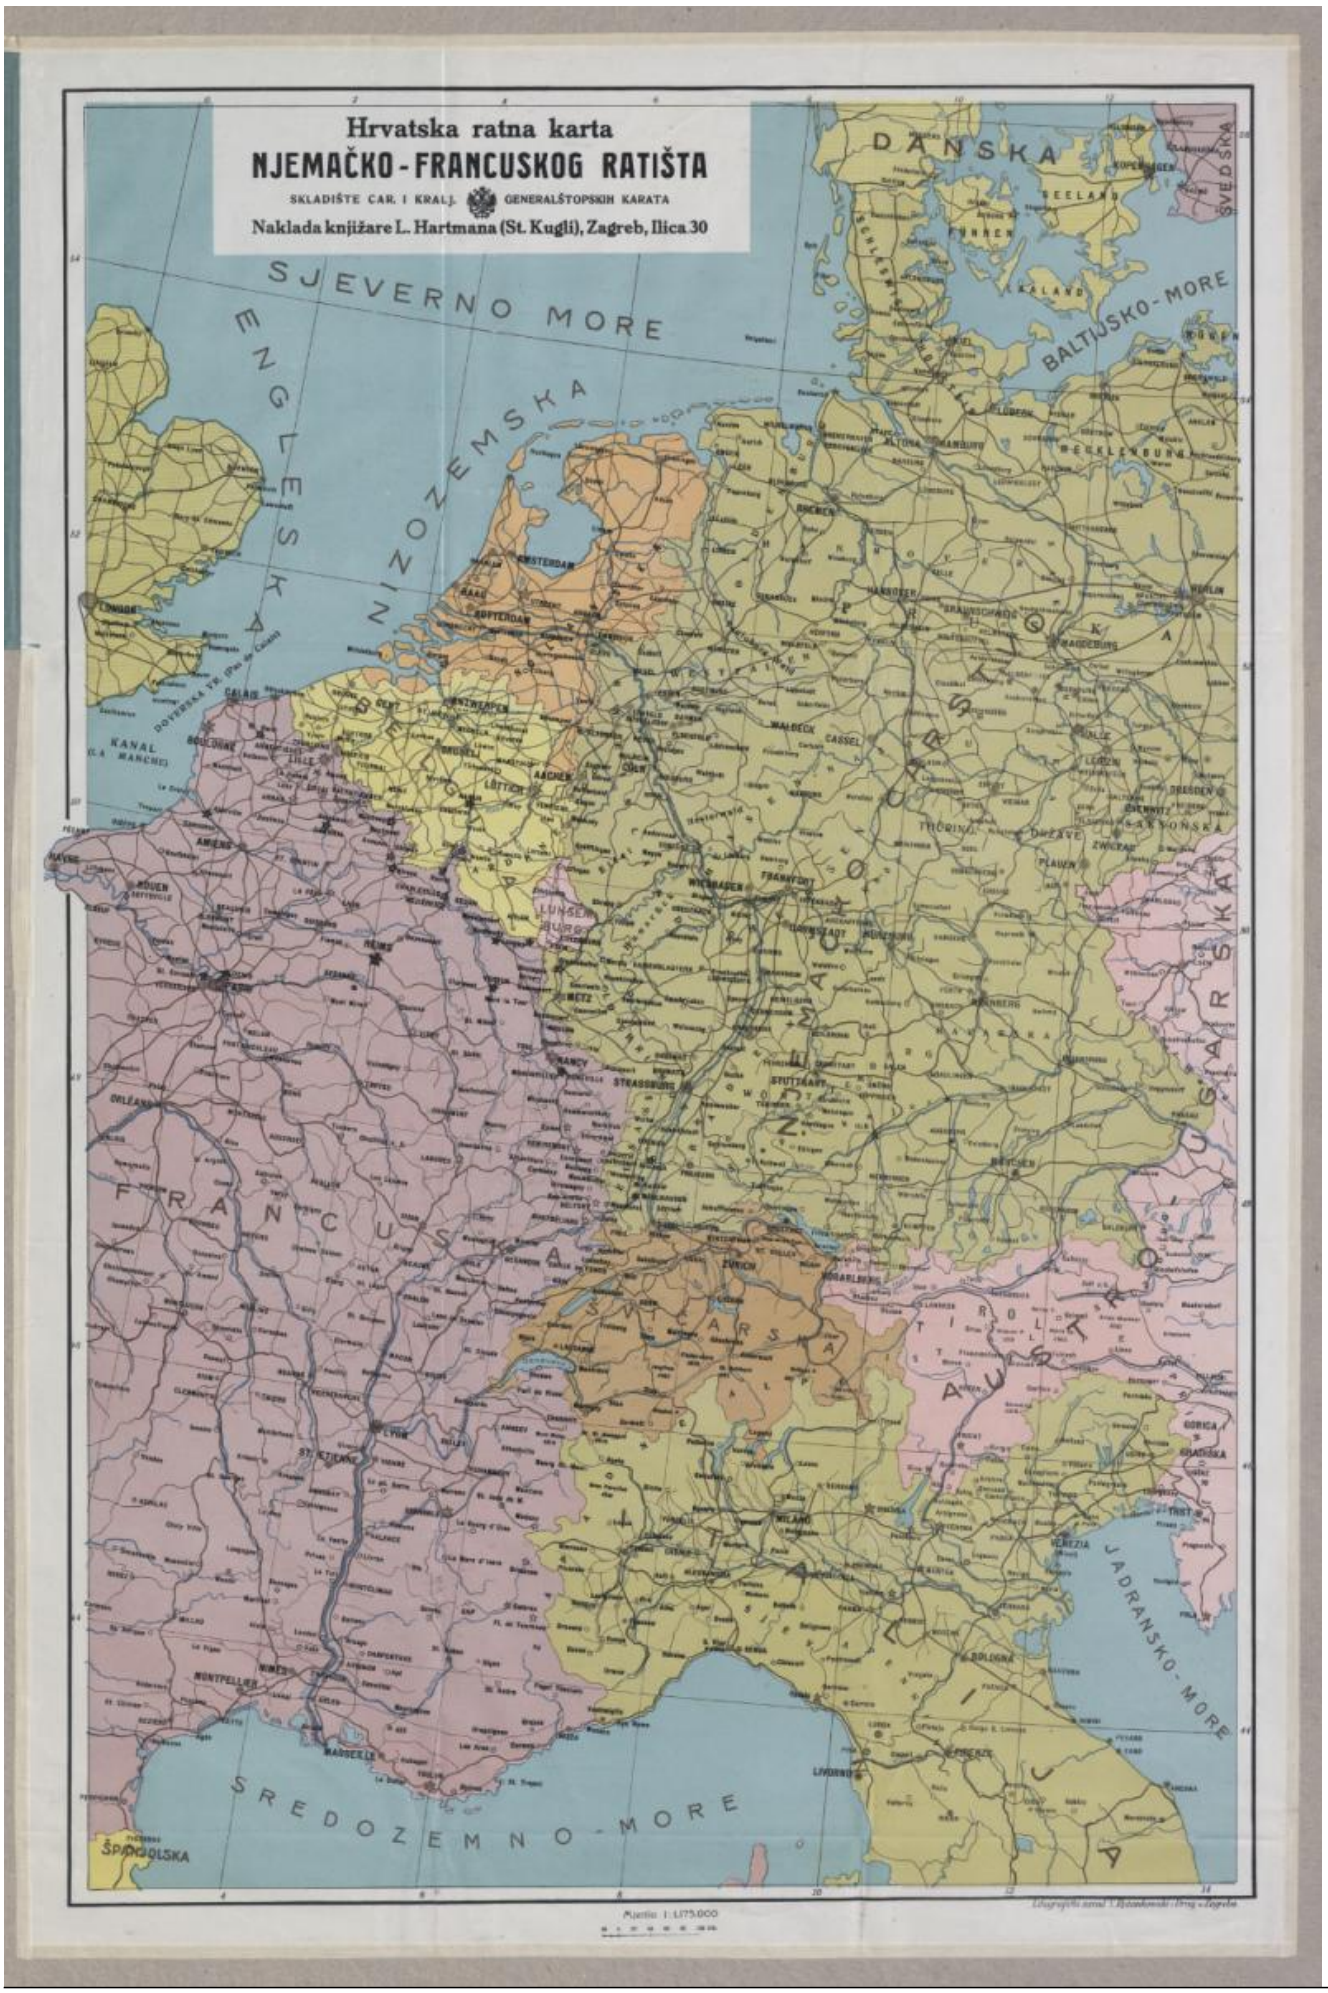

This part of our exhibition series focusing on World War I presents not only period maps but also other special documents. For example, visitors can have a look at Turkish and Russian posters, manuscript maps from the occupied Serbia or on Romanian invasion. Toys and paper models distributed during World War I are also presented.

National Széchényi Library started setting up a collection related to World War I as early as September 1914, shortly after the outbreak of the war, and the collection kept growing until the beginning of the 1920s. Not only various books, periodicals and prints, but also a lot of stamps, special, manuscript materials and even memorabilia had been collected.

[2]This part of our exhibition series focusing on World War I selects from the collection, presenting not only period maps that have been sent in but also other special documents. The themes of display cabinets feature various front sections, so visitors can have a look at, for example, Turkish and Russian posters, manuscript maps from the occupied Serbia or on Romanian invasion. Toys and paper models distributed during World War I are also presented.

By this small chamber exhibition, we would like to show the diversity and rarities of our collection detected during continuous processing.
