During the first part of the meeting, Judit Gerencsér gave a presentation outlining the history of the national library, which dates back more than 200 years.

She introduced the circumstances of its foundation, innovations, international cooperation opportunities, and the 21st-century mission of the library, which focuses on the exploration, preservation, and enrichment of the Hungarian cultural heritage.

In the second part of the meeting, the parties reviewed the prospects for future collaboration between the National Library and the Suleimenov Institute of Oriental Studies. The discussions emphasized the importance of establishing a long-term, institutionalized partnership to promote cultural and scientific cooperation. They also discussed the launch of joint research projects, and ways in which the two institutions could contribute to each other's professional work through exhibitions, conferences, and publication opportunities.
